Salvage of the Hobie Revolution

I've been kayak fishing for just over four years now and I remember each of my kayak purchases...

My first kayak purchase was a Malibu Kayak "Extreme" model. Not knowing much about kayaks when I started, this kayak was setup for fishing with all the hatches, rod holders and reinforced with extra plastic which nearly made it puncture proof from the bottom of the hull. Unfortunately, it was a slow moving vessel. Every time I went out fishing with my friends that owned Ocean Kayak's, they out performed me in speed and effort.

My second kayak purchase was a recreational kayak. I chose the Ocean Kayak "Malibu 2 XL" tandem so that I could get my family involved. I used both the Extreme and the Malibu 2XL for fishing taking friends with me that wanted to go. The 2XL was a better ride than the Malibu Extreme and I outfitted it with rod holders and a portable Humminbird 343c fishfinder. When I started catching a few fish here and there, the open hull was a plus when it came to fish storage. It also had a weight capacity of 500 pounds which was a plus. Then I was lucky enough to win the June 1998 "YakAttack" fishing tournament using the Malibu 2XL. First prize was a new Ocean Kayak "Prowler 15." So now I had three kayaks.

Then I got this brilliant idea... maybe Kelly at P&P Kayaks would let me trade in the Prowler 15 and I would pay the difference to upgrade to a Hobie kayak. I always hated paddling and after 10 to 15 miles, my shoulders always ached. So I asked Kelly before I used the kayak and he agreed. That's when I chose the Hobie Revolution. I had a yard sale the following weekend after purchasing the Revo and sold both my Malibu Extreme and Ocean Kayak Malibu 2XL to compensate for the money I spent on the kayak upgrade.

What a difference pedaling made in comparison to paddling. I now out performed or stayed even with my friends who had Prowler 15's. My shoulders became pain free after kayaking. I could travel farther with the strength of my legs using the mirage drive. Kayaking and fishing were now being fully integrated and having the Revo was a value-added plus kayak. I carefully thought out all modifications that I wanted after I started to boat 20 to 50 pound pelagic fish. However using the Revo, storage of fish is a big problem here in Hawaii and especially the balancing of the kayak when one 50 pounder is on board. That's when I decided to add the amas and the trampoline to the Revo. Then I discovered the YakAbout website... now called YakAss.net featuring Josh Holmes. Following his site, I thought it would be incredible to incorporate sailing with fishing. So I gave it a try and outfitted my Revo into a sail-fishing kayak.
